

Legacy of the Force: Recollections

Sacrifice

Jacen: I must make a sacrifice, because it's in the title and the authors don't know what subtlety is!

Meanwhile, in a separate novel that somehow got mixed in with this one:

Boba Fett: I'm Boba Fett, and I'm in this book even though I don't do anything relevant to the story!

Some guy: I have this thing that'll keep you from aging, or something. You're now immortal.

Boba Fett: I already was due to the character shield Traviss made for me, but I appreciate the gesture.

Back in the plot:

Mara: Jacen's evil! I could tell Luke, but instead I'm going to act completely out of character and go needlessly risk my life trying to kill Jacen myself with no backup.

Mara's x-wing is shot down. Or maybe Jacen's. Either way, something got shot down. Oh, and there's a fight in a cave.

Jacen: I'm not Jacen, I'm Ben!

Mara: I believe you!

Jacen: Psych!

Jacen kills Mara with a poison dart.

Jacen: I guess she was my sacrifice after all, even though I never really cared for her anyway. Wait, maybe my friendship with Ben was my sacrifice. Or it could be my family. Or maybe it was Mara after all. Or, possibly, the sacrifice was being a well-written character. Also, I'm Darth Caedus now.

Meanwhile:

Boba Fett: I found my long-lost wife, who was frozen in carbonite for, like, fifty years! But she has amnesia, and doesn't remember all the horrible things I did to protect her honor! And she has a rock that stores memories that I gave to her because I'm actually a sensitive guy who puts up a tough front because of his own insecurities and genuine love for his family! I wish my dead daughter didn't hate me, but I'll never be able to change that because she's dead! If only she was me, she could come back from the dead, but she's not quite that awesome, unlike me! Now

I'm going to have my granddaughter teach me about Mandalorian customs and how to conjugate stuff in Mando'a, because I just want to be close to her.

Andrew: What is this ****?

Ryan: This stopped being a Star Wars book the moment Fett showed up. It's actually a soap opera.

Andrew: Who's responsible for this?

Ryan: Karen Traviss.

Andrew: VENDETTA!

The End